Brief History of Cedardale Public School

Several buildings acted as the Cedar Dale area school before its final iteration in 1920. First, a simple log house, then a two-room brick school, then followed a six-room brick school that housed some 300 students. When Cedar Dale was annexed in 1923, the 300-student school had 1,449 students on the assessment roll, thus creating a need for a new school. The final rendition of the Cedardale Public School opened in 1920. With a cost of $42,000, the new school was made of red brick with an ornamental stone trimming. A two-room addition in 1927 made the six-room school more spacious for added students. Another two rooms were added during one final renovation in 1960 to replace portable use. The school faced low enrollment and high upkeep costs in the 1970's resulting in a proposed closure of the school by the board. However, community pressure kept the school's doors open. The school was plagued with more issues, including low enrollment, financial issues, and structural issues until 2002 when the school officially closed. Cedardale Public School merged with Bobby Orr Public School. As of 2021, the Cedardale building still stands and is operating as a music studio. It was designated a heritage site in 2023.
